An Angeline Boulley Reading Challenge

Angeline Boulley, author of the multi-award-winning Firekeeper's Daughter, challenges us to read contemporary stories by indigenous authors. As she said about her own book, "That's really all that I have wanted is for people to read my book and then say, 'Wow, I never knew that. I wonder what else I don't know.'" There are 574 federally recognized tribes in the U.S., each with its own distinct history, dialects, and cultural teachings. Angeline wants us to read books to remember that there is not one Native American story; there are many.

Here are some of Angeline's suggestions to get you started. Mark them off as you go!
